

Hello Cyberwolves

Ctrl +alt+ del. We cannot always control our external circumstances against insider and outsider threats, but we can choose how we respond to them; + Altering our actions and using our common sense, + deleting malicious links and using our discretion online.

Companies have moved their premises predominately online as their employees are working and shopping from home. The COVID-19 pandemic has caused a ripple effect online where unscrupulous cybercriminals have amplified their tactics to the next level, and external and insider threats have accelerated too.

Do something your future self will thank you for. Work smarter, not harder, in the fight against cybercrime!

NEWS

Edwin Mpofu shares his insights and explains what insider threats and mitigation are all about. Insider threats can be malicious or unintentional, but the unifying factor is that the threat agent, in this case, is someone who has or has had authorised access to the organisation's information assets.
